DPR nails the number one spot on Austin's construction company list

Ranked by Total Austin office billings 2013

Total billings remain steady at $2 billion on the Austin Business Journal 2014 list of commercial construction companies for the third year in a row. In addition to consistent total billings, Austin-area projects continue to account for roughly $1.5 billion of the activity represented on the list. That's a lot of cement and steel. But don't assume it's the same companies ratcheting up the numbers each year. For example, DPR Construction, the No. 1 firm this year, ranked second last year, but barely cracked the top 10 in 2012. And, Austin Commercial, which took the top spot last year, did not participate this year. Firms tend to move up and down in the rankings as often as the cranes they use erect another floor. Rankings fluctuate due to timing of when one project finishes and another begins. Higher education, the new main library, Seaholm development, senior living and apartment communities are examples of the types of projects being built.
